SYNOPSIS

Cunning and slender, harassed and on the run, Reynard is a metaphor of a never ending obsession with each breath, each gesture, each thought. Marta seeks in the emptiness of her body a way to arrive to her inner essence, in an abstract search of a free spirit that might end in her own enclosure.

ABOUT THE FILM

Leonor Noivo is a film director and Patrícia Guerreiro an actress. To make a film about the secret they share – the basis of their friendship – together they decide to create the character of Marta. Their secret is an existential challenge that medicine calls 'anorexia'. If Raposa ('Reynard' in Portuguese) rejects this designation and prefers to take a detour via an animal metaphor, it's because cinema has the power to conceive of illness as a way of being in the world, of diverting the handicap into a relationship to space, time and the facts of life – here, the obsession with total control over everything that circulates between the interior and the exterior – food, thoughts and emotions. Embodied by Patrícia, Marta is staged, directed and filmed by Leonor. Marta spends her life counting: the seconds, the calories she ingests, the steps she takes to go and collect her post... While Patrícia's voice describes and comments on what's going on inside her character, Leonor's camera films it from the outside. Washing, dressing, preparing her meal... the density of 16mm endows each everyday action with the painful gravity and choreographic sensuality of a spiritual exercise or purification ritual. Somewhere between the portrait of a character and the self-portrait of an actress, and without the slightest rhetoric, Raposa develops a very disconcerting metaphorical meditation on creating fiction – because the insanity of self-control is also the actor's unreasonable ambition, extolled by Diderot and deplored by Rousseau: to be nothing in order to be able to be anything and to control everything about the other that one becomes.

TERRATREME

A film production house created in 2008 that came out of the urge of a few young filmmakers to find a production model that could suit the different forms, scales and time frames in which their own films were made. Our goal was to articulate research and creation in a work method where each film's needs would determine the production model.

Like the homonymous film by Visconti — where a group of fishermen unites to buy a boat and stop depending on the ship-owner that hired them — it was high time for us to acknowledge that production is a fundamental aesthetic variable in the way a film turns out. We believe that only direct intervention of the directors in the global conception of the production plan and budget can contribute to generate the desired results. Currently working with a large and diverse group of filmmakers, TERRATREME has one of the strongest presences, among Portuguese production companies, in major film festivals around the world, while expanding its activities through international co-productions.
